Their corsots are formed out of the bark of a Madagascar tree, on a principle which permits them every freedom of movement in breathing and in any form of exercise. These are wonderful productions of ingentity. The colour resembles the skin to a remarkable degree, and the material is so fine that the most delicate touch will bardly distinguish it from human flesh. One made, these corsets are seldom removed, the bayaddres even sleaping in them. They thus preserve astonishingly beautiful figures to an advanced age, without pain or discomfort to themselves, whilst we, who boast ourselves intellectual and civilised, torture without beautifying ourselves. The pedigree of our corset, like many another modern absurdity which we are too familiar with to wonder at, stretches far back into antiquity, and may be briefly summarised.
